

Oral Health Program

Public Health Hygienists

December 2011

The North Dakota Department of Health's Oral Health Program strives to improve the oral health of all residents of North Dakota by developing guidance for prevention and care for children and families, building partnerships between dental professionals and other health professionals and families, and establishing and supporting programs designed to prevent and control oral diseases. Regional public health hygienists are available to assist local communities, health professionals and educators in designing and implementing preventive dental programs and health promotion efforts. Services include classroom oral health education sessions, oral health screenings, school fluoride programs, and oral health in-service and training programs for other health professionals.
